I Win Again

Abstract (Article Summary)
A poem is presented.

Full Text (211 words)
Copyright TamaraLand Publishers 2001

Nike Poems by Acquenetta Taylor

Being strong has made me weak
having to pretend I so complete
Though symptoms they spell sheer defeat
I’m a Winner not a Quitter I must compete.

In a place, a familiar face
I see as I pace the track holding back, my attempt to react
To the movement that surrounds me.

Pressing towards the mark
as the arch in my back
Deepens with determination.
Only to see as I pull my knee
there’s that face beside me.

From the corner of my eye
I glance to the side
Never showing worry or defeat.
Again I remind me
I’m a Winner, not a Quitter, and a Winner must compete!..

Growing closer to the end
I’m wearing the number # 10
Described best by the fans
that surround me.
From the year prior too
I haven’t a clue
Everything’s happening so fast.

My opponents they’re competing
But, it feels like I’m cheating
‘cause my legs seem to run on their own
But my mind says don’t knock it
Execute! As I block it
Straining to take that last stretch...

As I leap toward the mark
There’s relief in my heart
While the tension grips my shoulders
I’m beginning to swear
The trophy’s right there!
The competition is officially over.
I WIN AGAIN

[Author Affiliation]
Acquenetta Taylor is a writer and author of the soon to be released book "Just Before Dawn." She is interested in the commercials Nike has so often aired. She can be reached via email Twaimports@aol.com or (773-924-2645). Fax (773-924-2625).

Subjects:
People: Taylor, Acquenetta
Author(s): Acquenetta Taylor
Article types: Poetry
Publication title: Tamara : Journal of Critical Postmodern Organization Science. Las Cruces: 2001. Vol. 1, Iss. 2; pg. 96, 1 pgs
Source Type: Periodical
ISSN/ISBN: 15325555
Text Word Count 211